HEALTH GUARANTEE:

Chary's Elite Frenchie's warrants this puppy free from genetic defects that prevent the puppy from being a companion animal only, until the puppy reaches one year of age. If any defect is found, breeders must be notified within 48 hrs. of findings. Documentation from a licensed veterinarian must be provided to the breeder. The breeder will then have the opportunity to take said puppy to a vet of breeders choice for a second opinion. Upon the death or euthanizing of said puppy a necropsy will be performed to determine cause of death, or reason for euthanization. This must be done by a licensed veterinarian, and a copy of results will be given to the breeder. If this puppy is found to have a genetic defect that causes the puppy to not be a companion animal, this must be verified by a licensed veterinarian. In the case of a hereditary hip deformity, a copy of written notification must come to the breeder from Orthopedic Foundation for Animals (OFA). In case of a genetic eye deformity, written notification must come to the Breeder from a Board Certified Veterinary Ophthalmologist. Breeder will then replace the puppy with one of the same sex and hair coat color from the first available litter (puppy to be determined by the breeder). (No money will be refunded.) The puppy/dog shall be returned to the seller in well-cared for condition, at the buyer's expense or be humanely euthanized by a licensed veterinarian at the buyer's expense. Which course of action to be taken will be determined by the breeder.

Buyer has 72 hours to have the puppy/dog examined by a licensed veterinarian for general health from the date of delivery: ___/___/_____. Failure to do so will result in any and all warranties being canceled. Breeder accepts no liability for any communicable diseases after 72 hours from when the puppy/dog leaves the possession of the breeder. If the puppy/dog does not pass a general health exam, the buyer agrees to notify the breeder within 48 hours of said licensed veterinary exam with a copy of the original signed licensed veterinary statement of health. Buyer acknowledges that veterinary care, whether preventative or in treatment of any condition is an agreement between two parties, the buyer and the veterinarian. Breeder is not responsible for the buyer's veterinary expenses at any time or under any circumstance.

Breeder cannot guarantee adult size or confirmation of the puppy/dog.

Buyer hereby releases breeder and agrees to hold harmless for any liability, injuries or damages to persons or property caused by this puppy/dog.

Buyer shall assume full responsibility for the health, temperament, and appearance of the puppy/dog upon when the puppy/dog leaves the premises of the breeder.

Also, the buyer must follow only the recommended vaccine and deworming schedule during the puppy's/dog's first year of life while in possession of the buyer. The puppy/dog will also be placed on flea and heartworm preventative and on a healthy diet for a minimum of one year. Failure to follow any of the requirements in this contract causes any health warranties stated in this contract to become null and void. Buyer must have proof from a veterinarian that the puppy/dog was up-to-date on all vaccinations, dewormings, and heartworm prevention. The rest of the contract will remain in effect. Puppy/dog will be up to date on all vaccinations and dewormings when it leaves premises of breeder.

Dog (Canis lupus familiaris)

The French Bulldog is a small breed of domestic dog, related to the English Bulldog and American Bulldog.

History

The origin of the modern French Bulldog breed descends directly from the dogs of the Molossians, an ancient Greek tribe. The dogs were spread throughout the ancient world by Phoenician traders. British Molossian dogs were developed into the Mastiff. A sub-family of the Mastiff were the Bullenbeisser, a type of dog used for bull-baiting.

Blood sports such as bull-baiting were outlawed in England in 1835, leaving these "Bulldogs" unemployed. However, they had been bred for non-sporting reasons since at least 1800, and so their use changed from a sporting breed to a companion breed. Some Bulldogs were crossed with terriers, while others were bred for reduced size. By 1850 the Toy Bulldog had become common in England, and appeared in conformation shows when they began around 1860. These dogs weighed around 16–25 pounds (7.3–11 kg), although classes were also available at dog shows for those that weighed under 12 pounds (5.4 kg).

At the same time, lace workers from Nottingham, displaced by the industrial revolution, began to settle in Normandy, France. They brought a variety of dogs with them, including miniature Bulldogs. The dogs became popular in France and a trade in imported small Bulldogs was created, with breeders in England sending over Bulldogs that they considered to be too small, or with faults such as ears that stood up. By 1860, there were few miniature Bulldogs left in England, such was their popularity in France and due to the exploits of specialist dog exporters.

The small Bulldog type gradually became thought of as a breed, and received a name, the Bouledogue Francais. The dogs were highly fashionable and were sought after by society ladies and Parisian prostitutes alike, as well as creatives such as artists, writers and fashion designers. However, records were not kept of the breed's development as it diverged further away from its original Bulldog roots. As it changed, terrier and Pug stock may have been brought in to develop traits such as the breed's long straight ears, and the roundness of their eyes.

Breed clubs and modern recognition

Bulldogs were very popular in the past. One of its ancestors was the English bulldog. Americans had been importing French Bulldogs for a while, but it was not until 1885 when they were brought over in order to set up an American based breeding program. They were mostly owned by society ladies, who first displayed them at the Westminster Kennel Club Dog Show in 1896. They arrived again in the following year with even more entries; where the judging of the breed would go on to have future ramifications. The judge in question at the dog show only chose winners with "rose ears" – ears that folded at the tip, as with the standard for English Bulldogs. The ladies formed the French Bull Dog Club of America and created the breed standard which stated for the first time that the "erect bat ear" was the correct type. In the early 20th century they remained in vogue for high society, with dogs changing hands for up to $3,000 and being owned by members of influential families such as the Rockefellers and the J. P. Morgans. The American Kennel Club recognized the breed quickly after the breed club was formed, and by 1906 the French Bulldog was the fifth most popular dog breed in America.

This new Bulldog breed arrived for the first time in England in 1893, with English Bulldog breeds in uproar as the French imports did not meet the new breed standards in place by this time and wanted to prevent the English stock from cross-breeding with the French. The Kennel Club initially recognized them as a subset of the existing English Bulldog breed rather than an entirely new breed. Some English breeders in this period bred the French Bulldogs in order to resurrect the Toy Bulldog breed. On 10 July 1902, at the house of Frederick W. Cousens, a meeting was held to set up a breed club in order to seek individual recognition for the French breed. The adopted breed standard was the same one which was already in use in America, France, Germany and Austria. Despite opposition from Miniature Bulldog (the new breed name for the Toy Bulldog) and Bulldog breeders, in 1905, the Kennel Club changed its policy on the breed and recognized them separate from the English variety, initially as the Bouledogue Francais, then later in 1912 the name changed to French Bulldog.

Description

The French Bulldog should have the appearance of an active, intelligent, muscular dog, of heavy bone, smooth coat, compactly built, and of medium or small structure. The points should be well distributed and bear good relation one to the other, no feature being in such prominence from either excess or lack of quality that the animal appears deformed or poorly proportioned. In comparison to specimens of different sex, due allowance should be made in favour of the bitches, which do not bear the characteristics of the breed to the same marked degree as do the dogs.

Acceptable colors under the breed standard are the various shades of brindle, fawn or white with brindle patches (known as "pied"). The dominant color is brindle, then fawn with pieds being less common than the other colors. The breed clubs do not recognize any other colors or patterns. The skin should be soft and loose, especially at the head and shoulders, forming wrinkles. Coat moderately fine, brilliant, short and smooth.

The head should be large and square. The top of the skull should be flat but slightly rounded. The stop should be well defined, causing a hollow or groove between the eyes. Muzzle should be broad, deep, and well laid back; the muscles of the cheeks well developed. The nose should be extremely short; Nostrils broad with well defined line between them. The nose and flews should be black, except in the case of the lighter-colored dogs, where a lighter color of nose is acceptable. The flews should be thick and broad, hanging over the lower jaw at the sides, meeting the underlip in front and covering the teeth, which should not be seen when the mouth is closed. The underjaw should be deep, square, broad, undershot, and well turned up. Eyes should be wide apart, set low down in the skull, as far from the ears as possible, round in form, of moderate size, neither sunken nor bulging, and in color dark. No haw and no white of the eye showing when looking forward. Ears shall hereafter be known as the bat ear, broad at the base, elongated, with round top, set high in the head, but not too close together, and carried erect with the orifice to the front. The leather of the ear fine and soft.

The neck should be thick and well arched, with loose skin at throat. The forelegs should be short, stout, straight and muscular, set wide apart. The body should be short and well rounded. The back should be a roach back, with a slight fall close behind the shoulders. It should be strong and short, broad at the shoulders and narrowing at the loins. The chest, broad, deep and full, well ribbed with the belly tucked up.

The hind legs should be strong and muscular, longer than the forelegs, so as to elevate the loins above the shoulders. Hocks well let down. The feet should be moderate in size, compact and firmly set. Toes compact, well split up, with high knuckles and short stubby nails; hind feet slightly longer than forefeet. The tail should be either straight or screwed (but not curly), short, hung V low, thick root and fine tip; carried low in repose. Other than bat ears; black and white, black and tan, liver, mouse or solid black (black means without any trace of brindle) ; eyes of different color; nose other than black except in the case of the lighter-colored dogs, where a lighter color of nose is acceptable; hare lip; any mutilation.

Temperment

The French Bulldog, like many other companion dog breeds require close contact with humans. They have fairly minimal exercise needs, but do require at least daily walks. As a flat-faced breed, it is essential that owners understand that French Bulldogs cannot live outdoors. Their bulk and their compromised breathing system makes it impossible for them to regulate their temperature efficiently. In addition, Frenchie's are top heavy and therefore have a difficult time swimming. Precautions must be taken when exercising a Frenchie during hot or humid weather, as well.

French Bulldogs are very sweet and an excellent companion. The French Bulldog rarely barks and if he does it's often to draw attention, to point that he needs something or just because he is not happy. This breed is patient and affectionate with its owners, especially with children, who are especially protected by the females. French Bulldogs can easily live with other breeds when the proper introductions are done.

They are ranked 58th in Stanley Coren's The Intelligence of Dogs. There are certain exceptions to this average level of canine intelligence; a French Bulldog named Princess Jacqueline who died in 1934 was reported to have a vocabulary of twenty words, and used each word or phrase correctly.

Health

As a result of the compacted airway of the French bulldog, they may develop an inability to effectively regulate temperature. While a regular canine may suffer to some degree from the heat, to a Frenchie it may be lethal. As they are a brachycephalic breed, it is imperative that they be protected from temperature extremes at all times, and that they always have access to fresh water and shade.
